

Please count me as adamantly opposed to any loosening of current restrictions on media ownership. The concentration of media ownership in fewer hands has already profoundly limited the ability of diverse voices to be heard in the media that reach the most Americans. Any policy change that exacerbates this trend would be deeply wrong-headed, and would reflect the triumph of ideology and narrow private interest over the broader public interest.